TRANS RESOURCE & REFERRAL GUIDE 2017 KING COUNTY

A NOTE ON TRANS

When we use the term “trans” in this guide, we include anyone whose gender identity and/or expression does not match the gender norms that mainstream society attaches to their gender assigned at birth. There are many in our community, especially those from other cultural groups, who use different terms, such as two spirit, fa ‘afafine, bakla, and many more. This guide is for you.

GUIDE DISCLAIMER

The King County Trans Resource and Referral Guide (TRRG) was produced by the Coalition Ending Gender-Based Violence under a grant awarded by the King County Department of Community and Human Services Behavioral Health and Recovery Division. The opinions, findings, conclusions or recommendations expressed in this document are those of the contributors and do not necessarily reflect the official position or policies of King County or the Coalition Ending Gender-Based Violence. BATHROOM LAWS

For many trans and gender non-conforming people, using gender separated public restrooms can be a highly stressful experience. On June 6th 2016, the City of Seattle passed an All-Gender Restroom Ordinance that mandates that all public single-occupancy bathrooms be open by people of any gender identity or sex. Signage should be present and indicate that the restroom is open to all genders.

If you find a public building in violation of this ordinance, FILE A COMPLAINT WITH THE SEATTLE OFFICE OF CIVIL RIGHTS:

YOUR RIGHTS IN WASHINGTON STATE

The Washington Law Against Discrimination (WLAD) protects trans people from violence, threats, and bullying in public school, and from discrimination based on gender expression or gender identity (actual or perceived) in:

- Public accommodations (such as restaurants, hotels, and public schools)
- Housing (renting, buying, selling)
- Employment in public workplaces, and private workplaces with 8+ employees
- Credit transactions (such as loans and credit cards)
- Insurance transactions (such as health insurance)

The Washington State Human Rights Commission (HRC) investigates civil rights complaints under WLAD.

On the county level, King County bans discrimination in places of public accommodation, housing, employment, and education. On the city level, both Seattle and Burien ban discrimination in places of public accommodation, housing, and employment.

If you or someone you know has experienced discrimination due to sex, gender, or gender identity/expression, legal advocates can help you to take legal action. Find out

TO THE INCREDIBLE TRANS COMMUNITY IN KING COUNTY

Whether you are new to the area, new to being yourself or want to know what resources are out there, this guide is for you. It was written with you in mind and compiled by members of the trans communities here in King County. We want you to have this information and access to resources because your well-being matters.

Our beautiful trans community is endlessly diverse, so we've tried to make this guide as broad and inclusive as possible. We probably missed a few things, and unfortunately we can't guarantee that everyone will have a positive experience with each of these resources. But it's here. More importantly, you're here.

During these trying times of political upheaval, we must be here for each other. We offer this guide to you in love and unity. Whether it's accessing free medical care, finding disability resources or connecting with other trans people of color, we hope this guide offers you a constellation of starting points.

Beyond this guide, we acknowledge that trans communities have survived by looking beyond institutions to create our own informal networks of care. There are many unofficial groups we were not able to list in this guide. We encourage you to reach out to each other and share resources you know about. We are here. We have always been here. Together we are stronger.

TO THE AMAZING DISABLED TRANS COMMUNITY IN KING COUNTY

Hands that spin poetry out of the air, bodies that drool and limp, aching bodies propped up with floral canes, minds that see the future- society often labels the gorgeous diversity of our genders, bodies, and minds as dangerous and subversive. Something to lock away and hide, abuse, and destroy. As disabled trans people, we are told that our needs are too much. But we have already lived through trauma, forced institutionalization, abuse, police violence, war, poverty, neglect, incarceration, detention. We have survived. Our ancestors have fought and died for us to be here. We have faced the fragility of the human body and mind. And most of all, we have supported each other when others stopped caring, if they ever did. We redefine what it means to live and love in a world that was never built for us in the first place.

While we had hoped to include more access info for each provider in this guide, being on crip time, it just wasn't possible. With this in mind, we created a much more expansive set of Google Docs that will continue to be updated as a "living document." The links are listed in the Disability Resources section. These documents will include more of the underground resources so many of us depend on that we weren't able to include in the formal guide.

- Keep a log. It's very helpful to be specific when making a request i.e. "I've been misgendered by the receptionist during my last three visits" is more effective than "I am always being misgendered here."
- Express your needs rather than judgments of the person or organization i.e. "I need my housing to be safe for me" is often more effective than "You are being transphobic."

You deserve care, you deserve to access the resources you want and need, and you deserve to be loved exactly as you are. Remember: you hold the secrets of intersectionality, interdependence, creative problem solving, resilience, and courage that our world desperately needs. You are the ones we have been waiting for.

TO OUR WONDERFUL PROVIDERS IN KING COUNTY

We are glad you found this guide! Whether you are thinking of, about to or already providing crisis support, physical or behavioral care, youth services, domestic or sexual violence advocacy services, shelter or housing, legal services, or any other type of human services, please consider reading this guide and participating in ongoing learning about providing support for trans people.

Trans people still face discrimination and stigma that can prevent us from accessing health and human services programs. Many trans people may not have adequate, or any, health care coverage, and may not have the emotional, community or family support to navigate complex service systems.

By the time many of us have arrived at your office or practice, we have probably had a number of poor experiences with providers who did not provide services from a trans competent approach. Overall, we are less likely to verbalize problems, have a historical lack of screening, have delayed treatment, and have poorer health in comparison to your cisgender patients.

We want to partner and collaborate with you for the best services possible! Please treat us as the experts on our own bodies and histories – we are all different: We respond

SELF ADVOCACY

Trans and gender-nonconforming people have a long history of having to advocate for ourselves due to the discrimination, prejudice and stigma we experience. We are worthy of dignity, respect, and a life free of discrimination and violence. Here are some tips for how we can advocate for ourselves when we feel we have been treated unjustly.

- First, take a moment to assess for yourself:
 - What do you want for yourself? What's your goal in responding?
 - How much energy do you want to invest in this?

Even though the discrimination you experienced is wrong, you do not have to challenge it, especially if you don't feel safe, fear backlash, or feel too angry or upset to want to respond.
 - What resources do you have for helping the situation change?

It can be draining to advocate for yourself. Do you have a self-care plan? Do you have friends or community members who can help you advocate?
 - Who should you advocate to? In some cases, this might be directly to the person, in others it might be via more formal feedback or to a supervisor.

DISCLAIMER

We tried our best to get in touch with each provider and gather additional information about cultural competency, services, and accessibility that would help you make more informed decisions about where to seek services. We relied on a combination of provider responses and community-sourced knowledge to populate this key. However, we were not able to reach all of the providers, so an absence of a symbol for a provider may just mean that their information is missing, not that they don't have competent services. We encourage you to talk to community members and contact providers directly to inquire about this information.

ANOTHER NOTE

If a provider indicates that a trans person is unwelcome or ineligible for services based on their gender identity or expression, refer to page 87 for more information, including How to File a Discrimination Complaint.

ADVOCACY & REFERRALS

Improve your skills as an advocate to trans communities by learning how to treat us as whole and autonomous beings, and educating your colleagues and organizational leaders about gender diversity. When connecting us to other services, one thing you can do is to call ahead and ask questions about the policies and practices of that organization. When you do this, we as trans people can make a more informed choice about our options while maintaining our privacy.

IMPORTANT NOTE

Do not disclose personal or identifying information about someone you are advocating for unless you have been given explicit permission to do so!

BASIC SCRIPT

After introducing yourself and explaining why you are calling, here are some good questions you can ask:

1. Are you familiar with working with trans people in your program/service? Have you served trans people before?
2. Do you have trans people on staff in your program/service?

Because access can mean so many different things, it's essential to make your services and workplaces as accessible as possible, to the widest range of people possible. In many cases, this is required by law. Making a commitment to accessibility in your workplace can be a daunting task, so we've included some resources for you to the right to help you navigate the federal and Washington State laws that protect disability rights. We've also included an accessibility audit with which you can thoroughly review every aspect of your workplace. Many of the organizations listed in the disability support section on page 17 can also give in-person trainings on accessibility.

Understand that trans access and disability access are closely intertwined. That all bodies deserve care. That making a commitment to access is an ethical and political act. By improving and embracing your accessibility practices, using the strategies mentioned above and the resources listed below, you will send the message that each of us is invaluable and indisposable exactly as we are. We hope you will use this guide to live out that commitment to accessibility.

GENDER DIVERSITY

Understand that trans people are as diverse as any other group of people you serve and share a community with. Like all people, we present ourselves in a myriad of ways; there is no one way to “look” or be trans. We identify along a spectrum of sexual orientations. We may or may not decide to transition, whether that is through social presentation or medical treatments or procedures. We get to decide when, to whom, and how to disclose that information. Many of us face additional stress navigating institutional barriers due to our race, ability, mental health, legal status, and more.

A NOTE ON DISABILITY ACCESS

Disabled trans people experience an incredible amount of systemic barriers to care and basic services every single day. Even if services are trans friendly, if they’re not accommodating to our disabilities, we will still be unable to access them. Some common examples of access include wheelchair accessible facilities and bathrooms, ASL interpreters, enforced scent free policies and elevators that work consistently. Ongoing discrimination, questioning of our competence, and risk of violence and abuse are reasons many disabled trans people experience fear, anxiety, or hesitation when trying to access services. Providing a welcoming environment requires a willingness to listen and make adjustments as needed. Access is a process, and flexibility is key.

WE APPRECIATE YOU wanting to and trying to provide care for us, and we understand this may be a growing area for you. Trans health and well-being is a newer aspect to service provision and there are many aspects to our care that can be universally applied to all services you provide. Please ask each of us the name we want to be called and what term we use to describe our gender identities, because our “official documents” may not reflect that. Ask us what pronouns we use, and don’t make us check a M/F binary gender box.

We recognize that we may not fit into your personal ideas of gender expression or identity. However, it is vital that you fully accept and respect our stated gender identity to provide us with the very best care possible.

If you are a healthcare provider, there are so many wonderful resources out there for you. The Gay and Lesbian Medical Association (GLMA) has released “Ten Things Transgender Persons Should Discuss with their Healthcare Provider,” which is a great starting place if you are providing our primary care, prescribing hormones or consulting with us around a surgical intervention. We need your flexibility and trauma informed approaches to understanding our health histories and healthcare goals.

HOUSING & SHELTER

DISCLAIMER

The housing crisis in Seattle is acute. Like the other resources in this Guide, we can't guarantee that the shelters listed here will provide you with a trans-inclusive, welcoming experience. Also, rent for housing in Seattle has skyrocketed over the past years. We recommend that you get on permanent housing waiting lists as soon as you can. We also encourage you to reach out to people in your community to find out about group houses, cooperatives, and trans-friendly property managers that are accepting new applicants.

The homeless services system is very complex. Many homeless shelter/housing programs can only be accessed through the "Coordinated Entry for All" system by calling 211. In theory this system is supposed to make service access simpler and more responsive to individual needs; however, in an environment where services cannot meet the demand, the process can be frustrating. We encourage you to be clear about your needs and your right to fair treatment, but know that not everyone who needs housing can be served.
